

Embrace trust in a thirsting, divided world, says Congress keynote speaker Msgr. Raymond East

Day two of the 2017 Los Angeles Religious Education Congress kicked off with prayer and praise, as musicians from Catholic Relief Services and Oregon Catholic Press led the crowd in a lively morning prayer service in Anaheim, California.

Attendees were invited to think about global solidarity and embracing full trust in God, who holds the world in his hands — aptly setting the theme for the morning keynote given by Msgr. Raymond G. East, pastor of St. Teresa of Avila Parish in the Archdiocese of Washington, D.C.

Father Chris Bazyouros, director of the Office of Religious Education for the Archdiocese of Los Angeles, introduced Msgr. East to the spirited morning crowd at the Anaheim Convention Center Arena.

“He’s been a part of [the Religious Education] Congress for so many years, and we’re pleased to at last have him as a keynote speaker,” Father Bazyouros said, as the young Msgr. East came forward to the stage.

Wearing his signature traditional African garment, Msgr. East began his talk with a warm embrace.

“The theme of embracing trust begins with an embrace,” he said, giving Father Chris a spirited hug. “This morning, we commit ourselves to the divine embrace ... embracing the embraceable God.”

He introduced himself from his 138-year-old parish in the Washington, D.C. neighborhood of Anacostia River, which he described as “once the murder capital of the U.S. ... but is now a place filled with hope.”

Msgr. East also gave his greetings from 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, from the offices of President Donald Trump and Vice President Mike Pence.

“That’s why we are here today — this congress is different from any other. We’ve never been in a time where we feel so divided in conflict with one another,” Msgr. East said. “People apart, different ideas and ideologies, expressions of faith and political realities. But today I hope that we can deal with God’s politics.”

Expressing this theme of a united nation, embracing God’s trust in times of political division and turmoil, the lively Msgr. East asked everyone to look at the image of Divine Mercy as the ultimate example of embraceable love.

“Around this image of the body of Christ, we are one body, not divided, with Jesus as our head,” he said. “Do you want to know what God, what love looks like? Look at Jesus, with his arms open wide, streams of love and grace opened up for us, extended for all the world.”

Sharing stories from Scripture (including Moses, Abraham and Sarah), he talked about embracing trust in a God “who brings us from slavery to freedom, who is still in the business of liberation.”

He cited Mother Mary as the ultimate example of faithful trust in God, when she gave her yes — her fiat — in the Annunciation, singing her famous line: “Let it be done to me according to your Word.”

Keeping with the theme of embracing trust in a divided world, Msgr. East challenged the audience to think about minorities, immigrants and refugees in the 21st century, many who feel cast out more than ever.

“How does their plight connect with ours?” he asked the clapping and cheering crowd. “We have inherited this myth ... that the Divine image does not include darker shades of color. The myth that we are not all created in God’s image is dangerous and deadly. Unless we can go and see that we are all sisters and brothers, together, none of our politics will ever make sense.”

Msgr. East also talked about American “exceptionalism” as not God’s vision of true patriotism, which he defined as loving the land, Mother Earth, and respecting her and her people.

He made the crowd laugh when he pulled out several bills from his wallet, all of which read “In God We Trust.”

“If your money can trust in God, what about you? Are you ready to put your trust and value in God?”

He finished by telling stories of his parish’s mission twin partnership with St. Antoine Church in Vieux Bourg, Haiti, through “Hope for Haiti” and Project Educate A Child of Haiti.

The Archdiocese of Washington and St. Teresa of Avila parish partners with Catholic Relief Services and other charities to bring annual donations, volunteers, food and medical supplies to the needy in the dioceses of Haiti.

“St. Teresa of Avila said that Christ has no body, no hands, no feet on earth, but yours ... yours are the hands God needs to feed the hungry. God is using your body, your strength, even your time and money to do his work,” said Msgr. East.

Inviting the participants to raise their hands in an oath of solidarity, he asked them to become “international Christians, going to the least, lost and
